The Dangers of Universal Mental Health Screening Legislation in Minnesota

Karen R. Effrem, M.D., Pediatrician and Policy Analyst

Board of Directors of four national organizations:

EdWatch International Center for the Study of Psychiatry and Psychology Alliance for Human Research Protection National Physicians Center

The Minnesota legislature is considering universal mental health screening for K-12, pre-school, all kids at least once by age three, and infants. Mental Health screening is subjective and inaccurate in children. Diagnoses very often reflect simple behavioral issues or politically incorrect attitudes and values. Powerful medications with serious side effects are almost always used as the treatment.

Mental health screening legislation will affect all Minnesota children in public, private, and home schools.
